THE BABYLONIAN GENESIS

The Story of Creation

ALEXANDER HEIDEL

Second Edition

THE UNIVERSITY OF CHICAGO PRESS
CHICAGO & LONDON
CHAPTER I

ENÚMA ELISH

Of all the Semitic inscriptions composed in cuneiform writing few have awakened as great a general interest as the epic known among the Babylonians and Assyrians as Enûma elish ("When above"), which takes its name from the opening words of the poem. Aside from linguistic considerations, this widespread popularity of Enûma elish is in part due to its great significance for the study of the theogonic and cosmogonic views of the Mesopotamians, and thus for a comparative study of ancient Near Eastern religion in general; but above all else it is due to the fact that Enûma elish presents quite a number of analogies to the first two chapters of the Book of Genesis.

THE DISCOVERY OF THE TABLETS

This great epic is recorded on seven clay tablets and covers in all a little over one thousand lines. The first fragments to come to light were discovered by Austen H. Layard, Hormuzd Rassam, and George Smith among the ruins of King Ashurbanipal's (668–ca. 630 B.C.) great library at Nineveh between the years 1848 and 1876. During their explorations at Ashur (the old capital of Assyria), from 1902 to 1914, the German excavators unearthed a number of fragments of an Assyrian version of the Babylonian story (especially of Tablets I, VI, and VII) which differs from the latter chiefly in that some copies substitute the name of Ashur, the king of the Assyrian gods, for that of Marduk, the king of the Babylonian deities, and in that they make Laḫmu and Laḫamu the parents of Ashur. In 1924–25 two almost complete tablets, I and VI, of a Neo-Babylonian version of the epic were discovered at Kish by the joint expedition of Oxford University and the Field Museum of Chicago. And in 1928–29 the Germans found quite a large Neo-Babylonian fragment of Tablet VII at Uruk (the biblical Ereh).
Thanks to these discoveries and to purchases of fragments which have been made from dealers in antiquities (the provenance of most of these fragments being uncertain), the epic has been restored almost in its entirety; the only tablet of which a large portion is still wanting is Tablet V.

The Publication of the Material

The first to publish an account of the epic was George Smith, of the British Museum, who in 1875 described in a letter to the Daily Telegraph the contents of about twenty fragments of the creation series. In 1876 appeared his book The Chaldean Account of Genesis, which contained a translation and discussion of all the pieces which had been identified. All this material was very fragmentary, but the resemblance of its contents to the initial chapters of the Old Testament was unmistakable, and consequently it had an immediate appeal to a much wider circle of students than would otherwise have been the case. Since then this story has been copied and translated by a great many Assyriologists, especially as new tablets or portions of tablets have been found.

In 1890 Peter Jensen, in his work Die Kosmologie der Babylonier (Strassburg), published a translation together with a transliteration and a commentary; five years later Heinrich Zimmern issued a new and improved translation in Hermann Gunkel's volume Schöpfung und Chaos in Urzeit und Endzeit (Göttingen, 1895); the very next year Friedrich Delitzsch issued Das babylonische Weltschöpfungsepos (Leipzig, 1899). Within a few years this was superseded by Jensen's penetrating and still highly valuable study of Enūma elish in his book Assyrisch-babylonische Mythen und Epen (Berlin, 1900), containing a transliteration, a translation, and an extensive commentary. At the turn of the century, L. W. King issued a large number of creation fragments in his two volumes The Seven Tablets of Creation (London, 1902), the first of which contains chiefly transliterations, translations, and discussions, while the second offers cuneiform texts only.

The publications in which the cuneiform texts have been made available are for the most part cited in the studies just mentioned; the rest will be referred to in footnotes in the present volume.

A Summary of the Story

The epic opens with a brief reference to the time when nothing except the divine parents, Apsû and Ti’āmat, and their son Mummu existed. Apsû was the primeval sweet-water ocean, and Ti'āmat the salt-water ocean, while Mummu probably represented the mist rising from the two bodies of water and hovering over them, particularly since in Tablet VII: 86 he is brought in direct relation with the clouds. These three types of water were mingled in one, forming an immense, undefined mass in which were contained all the elements of which afterward the universe was made. As yet, there was neither heaven nor earth, not even a reed marsh was to be seen. In time, Apsû and Ti’āmat brought forth the brother and sister pair Lahmu and Lahamu. While these two were growing up, another brother and sister pair came into being, Anshar and Kishar, who surpassed the older children in stature. The nature of these two divine pairs is still a matter for conjecture.

After many years, a son was born to Anshar and Kishar. They named him Anu, probably in allusion to the fact that he was the likeness of his father, Anshar. Anu was the sky-god. He, in turn, begot Nudimmud, his likeness. Nudimmud, also known as Enki and Ea, was a god of exceptional wisdom and strength; he became the god of the subterranean sweet waters, the god of magic, and the mastermind of the Mesopotamian divinities. He had no rival among his fellow-gods; in fact, because of the advantages with which he was endowed, he was the master even of his fathers.

The younger gods, being full of life and vitality, naturally enjoyed noisy, hilarious gatherings. These, however, caused serious distress to their old, inactive, and rest-loving parents and grandparents, Apsù and Ti-âmat. Peaceful means were tried to diminish the disturbing clamor, but without success. Finally, Apsù, in utter exasperation, resolved on a drastic course of action. Accompanied by Mummu, his son and vizier, he went before Ti-âmat and submitted a plan to her which made her motherly heart cry out in painful rage: "Why should we destroy that which we ourselves have brought forth? Their way is indeed painful, but let us take it good-naturedly!" But Apsù, supported by his vizier, adhered to his expressed purpose with adamantine tenacity: "I will destroy (them) and put an end to their way, that silence be established, and then let us sleep!"

At the break of the news, the gods were filled with consternation and ran about aimlessly. Finally, they quieted down and sat in silent gloom, without anyone being able to suggest a way of deliverance. Fortunately, in that dark hour there was found one who was master even of Apsù; it was Ea, "the one of supreme understanding, the skilful, (and) wise," the god of magic. He made a magic circle of some kind around the gods, as a protection against attack, and then composed an overpowering, holy incantation. He recited it and caused it to descend, as a soporific force, upon Apsù. As Ea recited his incantation, Apsù succumbed to the power of the spell and sank into a profound sleep. And as Apsù was lying there, suffused with sleep, Ea removed his royal tiara and his supernatural radiance and clothed himself therewith. After he had thus come into possession of Apsù's might and splendor, he slew the father of all the gods and imprisoned his vizier, gaining his victory chiefly through the application of authority or power inherent in the spoken word, the magic of the spell. Ti-âmat remained unmolested, since she had not been in sympathy with Apsù's designs.

Upon the slain Apsù, Ea subsequently established a spacious abode. He named it "Apsû" and appointed it for shrines for himself and for other deities. There he and his wife, Damkina, dwelt in splendor.

There also it was that Marduk, "the wisest of the gods," was born, the one who was destined some day to deliver the gods from an even more dreadful foe and to become the head of the vast Babylonian pantheon. "He who begot him was Ea, his father. Damkina, his mother, was she who bore him. He sucked the breasts of goddesses" and thus imbibed additional divine power and qualities. Marduk was an imposing figure, endowed with flashing eye and awe-inspiring majesty. When his father beheld him, "he rejoiced, he beamed, his heart was filled with joy." Evidently by means of magic, Ea then conferred upon his son double equality with the gods, which manifested itself in the two faces of Marduk and the doubled dimensions of his members, so that "he was exalted among the gods."

In the meantime, Ti-âmat was disturbed, doubtless because of the violent death of her husband. Day and night, she restlessly moved about. Her restlessness mounted as some of the gods, led by Kingu (cf. Tablet VI:23–30), in their wickedness instigated her to avenge the death of her spouse. Ti-âmat yielded and decided on war against the gods who were either responsible for or in sympathy with the murder of her husband.

The rebel gods now publicly seceded and went over to the side of Ti-âmat; they raged and plotted, not resting day or night; "they held a meeting and planned the conflict." Ti-âmat, on her part, gave birth to eleven kinds of monster serpents and ferocious dragons for the impending contest; she exalted Kingu to be her new spouse, she intrusted him with the high command of the battle, gave him dominion over all the gods, and presented him with the coveted tablet of destinies with all its magic powers. A formidable demonic host had suddenly sprung into existence.

It was not until Ti-âmat was almost ready for the assault that someone informed Ea of the imminent peril. When Ea, the wise and skilful, the hero who had vanquished Apsû, heard of the impending danger, he was benumbed with fear and dismay.
When he had thought the matter over and had regained his composure, he went to Anshar, his grandfather, and "communicated to him all that Ti'amat had planned" and the preparations she had made, repeating word for word the report which he himself had received. Anshar was moved to expressions of deepest grief and grave concern and appealed to Ea to proceed against the foe. Ea obeyed the voice of his grandfather, but the venture, though undertaken by him who had achieved such a decisive victory over Apsû, ended in failure. Anshar then turned to his son Anu, urging him to try peaceful measures, saying: "[Go and] stand thou before Ti'amat, [that] her spirit [become quiet and] her heart calm down. [If] she does not hearken to thy word, speak our [word?] to her, that she may be quieted." Anu went, armed with his own authority and that of the leader of the gods. But, unlike Apsû, Ti'amat could not be overcome by any amount of mere authority or any degree of mere magic power; she had to be conquered through the application of physical force. Anu returned in terror, asking to be relieved of the task. Anshar lapsed into silence, looking upon the ground and shaking his head. "All the Anunnaki were assembled at the place. Their lips were closed, [they sat in] silence." Never before had the gods been in such a plight. The picture is painted in extremely dark and somber colors to make the greatness of the subsequent victory all the more evident.

In this moment of supreme crisis, a happy thought occurred to Anshar; he remembered the prowess of valiant Marduk, who in some way had already proved his valor (cf. Tablet II:95) and who certainly would not fail. Marduk was summoned into the presence of Ea, to be instructed by his father, and then appeared before Anshar. When Anshar saw the young Marduk, abounding in strength and radiating confidence, "his heart was filled with joy; he kissed his lips, his fear was removed," while Marduk assured him: "[Anshar], be not silent, (but) open thy lips; I will go and accomplish all that is in thy heart! [My father, creator, be glad and rejoice; soon thou shalt trample upon the neck of Ti'amat!]" There was no doubt in anyone's mind that Marduk, despite his youth, could save the gods from their powerful enemy. Moreover, Marduk was ready to go to battle and deliver the gods from disaster. But he demanded a high price—supreme and undisputed authority among the gods. Anshar agreed to the terms (cf. Tablet III:65–66), but the decision had to be confirmed by the gods in their assembly.

Anshar therefore dispatched Kaka, his vizier, to Lahmu and Lahâmu and all the other gods who were living at a great distance and, consequently, had as yet no knowledge of the impending struggle. Kaka was to inform the gods of the gravity of the situation and to summon them into the presence of Anshar. After a few prefatory remarks, Anshar gave Kaka a verbatim repetition of the account of Ti'amat's hostile activities and charged him to repeat the message word for word to Lahmu and Lahâmu. Kaka went and repeated Anshar's speech in every detail. Upon learning of the sudden and unparalleled crisis, the gods were perplexed and horrified, they cried aloud and wailed painfully. They departed and entered into the presence of Anshar, filling the Court of Assembly. They kissed one another as they met, and then sat down to a banquet, which Anshar had prepared to put the gods in the right frame of mind. "The sweet wine dispelled their fears; [their] bodies swelled as they drank the strong drink. Exceedingly carefree were they, their spirit was exalted; for Marduk, their avenger, they decreed the destiny."

After the feast, the gods erected a lordly throne-dais for Marduk, and the young god sat down before his fathers to receive sovereignty. In a solemn speech, the gods conferred upon him the powers of the supreme position in the pantheon and gave him "kingship over the totality of the whole universe." To determine whether Marduk actually had this power, the gods made a test. They placed a garment in their midst. At his command, the garment was destroyed; again at his command, the garment was restored to its former condition. When the gods beheld the efficacy of his word, they rejoiced and paid homage, acclaiming Marduk king of the gods. They invested him with the royal insignia, the scepter, the throne, and the royal robe(?), adding thereto “an irresistible weapon smiting the enemy,” with the plea: “Go and cut off the life of Ti'amat!”

Marduk departed to prepare for the fray. He made a bow, put an arrowhead on the arrow, and grasped a club in his right hand; the bow and quiver he hung at his side; like the storm-god, he caused lightning to precede him; he filled his body with a blazing flame; he made a net and had the four winds, the gift of Anu, carry it for him; as a further aid, he created seven winds of his own; he raised the rain-flood and mounted his irresistible, terrible storm chariot, drawn by four frightful mythological creatures. Clad in a terrifying coat of mail, with an overpowering brightness about his head, and supplied with various apotropaic means, Marduk then set out to meet the seemingly invincible Ti'amat, the gods milling around him.

The mere appearance of Marduk, arrayed in all his terrifying might and dazzling splendor, threw Kingu and his helpers into confusion. Ti'amat alone remained unperturbed, greeting Marduk with awful taunts and apparently a loud roar to frighten the youthful god. But Marduk was of tougher fiber than his father Ea and his grandfather Anu. Without being in the least disturbed, he denounced Ti'amat in trenchant terms for her wicked measures and challenged her to a duel! “When Ti'amat heard this, she became like one in a frenzy (and) lost her reason.
She cried out loud (and) furiously,” shaking to her very foundations! But she accepted the challenge, and the two pressed on to single combat. Marduk spread out his net and enmeshed her.
“When Ti'amat opened her mouth to devour him, he drove in the evil wind, in order that (she should) not (be able) to close her lips.” As the raging winds distended her body, Marduk shot an arrow through her open mouth; it struck her heart and destroyed her life. Having thus killed Ti'amat, he cast down her carcass and victoriously stood upon it. When her followers saw that their leader was dead, they dispersed and tried to flee. But none escaped.

The enemy gods were imprisoned and deprived of their weapons. Marduk took from Kingu the tablet of destinies, sealed it with his own seal, to prove his ownership and to legalize his claim to it, and fastened it on his breast. After having strengthened his hold upon the captive gods, he returned to Ti'amat, split her skull with his unshearing club, cut her arteries, and caused the north wind to carry her blood southward to out-of-the-way places. Finally, he divided the colossal body of Ti'amat into two parts to create the universe. With one half of her corpse he formed the sky, with the other he fashioned the ever, and then established Anu, Enlil, and Ea in their respesive domains.

Next, he created stations in the sky for the great gods; he or-organized the calendar, by setting up stellar constellations to de-terminate, by their rising and setting, the year, the months, and the days; he built gates in the east and in the west for the sun to enter and to depart; in the very center of the sky he fixed the zenith; he caused the moon to shine forth and intrusted the night to her. After some detailed orders to the moon, the tablet dealing with the creation and organization of the heavenly bodies breaks off.

The imprisoned gods, who had joined the ranks of Ti'amat, were made the servants of the victors, for whose sustenance they had to provide. However, their menial task proved so burdensome that they asked Marduk for relief. As Marduk listened to the words of the captive gods, he resolved to create man and to impose on him the service which the defeated deities had to render. In consultation with Ea, it was then decided to kill the ringleader of the rebels, to create mankind with his blood, and to set the captive gods free. In a solemn court Kingu was indicted. He it was who “created the strife,” who “caused Ti'amat to revolt and prepare for battle.” Accordingly, Kingu was bound and brought before Ea. With the aid of certain gods, Ea severed his arteries and created mankind with his blood, acting on the ingenious plans of Marduk. Man now had to take over the work of the defeated army of gods and feed the host of Babylonian divinities.

Next, Marduk divided the totality of the Anunnaki, a name which in the early period seems to have been a general designation for all the gods of heaven and earth. Marduk set three hundred of them in the heavens, and three hundred he assigned to the earth, allotting to each group their appropriate tasks.

As a token of gratitude for their deliverance at the hands of Marduk, the Anunnaki built the city of Babylon and Marduk’s great temple Eshgila with its stagetower. Then the gods, after a joyful banquet, in solemn assembly, recited the fifty names of Marduk. As the gods had previously met in the Court of Assembly to invest Marduk with supreme regal power and authority before he set out against Ti'ámat, so they were gathered again in the same place to confer upon him fifty titles with all the attributes and abilities of the various gods of the pantheon, thus making “his way pre-eminent,” in further appreciation of all that Marduk had done.

The poem closes with an epilogue urging the people to study these names, to hold them in remembrance, and to rejoice in Marduk, that it may be well with them.\(^3\)

THE OBJECT OF THE EPIC

Enûma eliš is the principal source of our knowledge of Mesopotamian cosmology. While the various other creation stories treat of certain aspects of the cosmos, Enûma eliš gives us an account of the origin and the order of the universe as a whole. The universe, in its component parts, begins with the gods, who represent cosmic elements or forces in nature (although the character of some of the gods is still uncertain), and is organized and completed through the creative activities of Marduk, the author of the present world order.

Yet, Enûma eliš is not primarily a creation story at all. If we were to put together all the lines which treat of creation, including the theogony and even granting that most of the missing portion of Tablet V deals with works of creation, they would cover not even two of the seven tablets but only about as much space as is devoted to Marduk’s fifty names in Tablets VI and VII. The brief and meager account of Marduk’s acts of creation is in sharp contrast to the circumstantial description of his birth and growth, his preparations for battle, his conquest of Ti’ámat and her host, and the elaborate and pompous proclamation and explanation of his fifty names. If the creation of the universe were the prime purpose of the epic, much more emphasis should have been placed on this point.

\(^3\)This summary has benefited to some degree from Thorkild Jacobsen’s observations in Frankfort, Wilson, Jacobsen, and Irwin, The Intellectual Adventure of Ancient Man (Chicago, 1947), pp. 170-83.

As it is, there can be no doubt that, in its present form, Enûma eliš is first and foremost a literary monument in honor of Marduk as the champion of the gods and the creator of heaven and earth. Its prime object is to offer cosmological reasons for Marduk’s advancement from the position as chief god of Babylon to that of head of the entire Babylonian pantheon. This was achieved by attributing to him the defeat of Ti’ámat and the creation and maintenance of the universe. The description of the birth of the gods and of the subsequent struggle between Ea and Apsû and the account of the origin of the universe were added mainly for the purpose of furthering the cause of Marduk; the former was included as the antecedent to Marduk’s conflict with Ti’ámat and his accession to supreme power among the gods, while the latter, the story of the creation of the universe, was added not so much for the sake of giving an account of how all things came into being, but chiefly because it further served to enhance the glory of Marduk and helped to justify his claim to sovereignty over all things visible and invisible.

Next to the purpose of singing the praises of Marduk comes the desire, on the part of the Babylonian priests, who were responsible for the composition of this epic, to sing the praises of Babylon, the city of Marduk, and to strengthen her claim to supremacy over all the cities of the land. Babylon’s claim to supremacy was justified already by the fact that it was Babylon’s god who had conquered Ti’ámat and had created and organized the universe. It was further supported by tracing Babylon’s origin back to the very beginnings of time and by attributing her foundation to the great Anunnaki themselves, who built Babylon as a dwelling place for Marduk and the gods in general (Tablet VI: 45–73). Our epic is thus not only a religious treatise but also a political one.
THE SOURCES OF THE EPIC

It is generally admitted that Enûma elish, though it is one of the literary masterpieces of the Babylonian Semites, is undoubtedly based on the cosmology of the Sumerians and that the central figure of the Sumerian story was Enlil, the most important god in Babylonia until Marduk’s rise to supremacy. For not only do all the gods, with the exception of Ti’amat, appear to have Sumerian names but some of the gods themselves, such as Apsû, Anu, and Enlil, are admittedly Sumerian. Moreover, the majority of the monsters which Ti’amat bore (Tablet I:132–42) and almost all the winds created by Marduk (Tablet IV:45–46) likewise have Sumerian names. Even man himself is called by a Sumerian term, lullû, which is immediately translated by the Semitic amēlu (Tablet VI:6–7). Furthermore, the separation of the primeval world matter into heaven and earth is a feat which the Sumerians ascribed to Enlil, the personified air, for it is the atmosphere which, placed between the sky and the earth, holds them apart. Another important point to be considered in this connection is the fact that the Semites in Babylonia became in general the heirs of the Sumerians, and as such they took over, with certain modifications, their script and literature, their religion, their culture and civilization. But how much of Enûma elish must be traced to Sumerian sources cannot be ascertained with any degree of finality until Sumerian cosmology is better known as to both content and origin, for, as S. N. Kramer has remarked, it is quite possible that there are “traces of Semitic influence even in the earliest known Sumerian mythology just as we find them in case of the Sumerian language.”

*It has been asserted that the explanations of Marduk’s names in Tablet VII are derived throughout from a Sumerian original. But the assertion cannot be proved (see A. Ungnad’s article in Zeitschrift für Assyriologie, XXXI [1917/18], 153–85).*

* In the Journal of the American Oriental Society, LXIII, 71, n. 4.

ENûMA ELISH

THE DATE OF COMPOSITION

When our poem was composed in approximately its present Semitic form we cannot as yet determine with certainty. The tablets and fragments from Ashurbanipal’s library at Nineveh belong to the seventh century B.C.; those from the city of Ashur date back to approximately 1000 B.C.; while those from Kish, the fragment from Uruk, and those of uncertain provenance belong to the sixth century B.C. and later. But all these tablets are copies of older ones, as indicated by the colophons at the ends of the different tablets and by the fact that on the tablets from Ashur the scribes usually retained the name of Marduk, instead of substituting for it that of the god of Ashur, which shows that they copied from Babylonian originals. The date for the composition of our epic must therefore be pushed back beyond the date of the oldest copies at our disposal, and that will bring it somewhere beyond 1000 B.C.

However, we have reason to push it back much further. The inscription of Agum II (fifteenth century B.C.), the ninth king of the Kassite Dynasty, following almost immediately upon the First Babylonian Dynasty, seems to show that Enûma elish existed already during the fifteenth century B.C. In this inscription Agum records the restoration of the statues of Marduk and his consort Šarranu, which had been carried away to the land of Egypt, and describes the works of art with which he embellished the statues and sanctuaries of these two divinities. He states, among other things, that on the panels of the doors of the holy chambers he had his craftsmen represent a number of monsters. He mentions the viper, the laḫmu, the bison, the great lion, the mad dog, the dragonfly, and the goat-fish. These monsters, with the exception of the goat-fish, are identical with those which Marduk vanquished in his combat with Ti’amat (Tablet I:140–43). This similarity alone, of course, proves nothing as to the date of Enûma elish, because one could easily argue that the monsters in question formed part of general Babylonian mythology and that both passages reverted to the same fountainhead. But their association with Marduk seems to reveal the influence of Enûma elish and, consequently, seems to indicate that our epic was composed at least before the end of Agum’s reign.7

But we have better reasons than this for assuming an even earlier date. For if we consider that the two main objects of the epic are to justify Marduk’s ascendance to supreme rulership over all the Babylonian divinities and to support Babylon’s claim to pre-eminence above all the other cities in the country, as we have seen, and that Babylon rose to political supremacy during the First Babylonian Dynasty (1804–1595), particularly under the energetic king Hammurabi (1792–1750), and that during this dynasty Marduk became the national god,8 it would seem that the poem, in approximately its present form, was composed some time during the First Babylonian Dynasty. The language of the epic points in the same direction, as observed by W. von Soden.10

---

1 Cf. S. Langdon, The Babylonian Epic of Creation (Oxford, 1923), pp. 10–11. If L. J. Gelb’s contention, in the Journal of Near Eastern Studies, VIII (1949), 348, n. 12, that the Agum inscription is a forgery proves correct, the argument based on this document of course falls to the ground.

2 The dates which are here provisionally accepted are those of Sidney Smith, Alalakh and Chronology (London, 1940), p. 29.

3 The real beginning of Marduk’s advancement dates to the reign of Hammurabi. Cf. the opening lines of the prologue to the Code of Hammurabi: “When the exalted Anu, the king of the Anunnaki, (and) Enlil, the lord of heaven and earth, who determine the destinies of the land, committed the sovereignty over all the people to Marduk, the first-born son of Ea; (when) they made him great among the Igigi; (when) they proclaimed to Babylon his exalted name; (when) they made it unsurpassable in the regions of the world (and) in its midst established him for an everlasting kingdom whose foundations are firm as heaven and earth: at that time Anu and Enlil called me, Hammurabi, the reverent prince, the worshiper of the gods, by my name, to cause justice to prevail in the land, to destroy the wicked and the evil, to prevent the strong from oppressing the weak, to go forth like the sun over the human race, to enlighten the land and to further the welfare of the people” (R. F. Harper, The Code of Hammurabi, King of Babylon (Chicago and London, 1904); Bruno Meissner, Babylonien und Assyrien, II (Heidelberg, 1925), 46; and O. E. Ravn in Acta orientalia, VII (1929), 81–90.

---

ENÛMA ELISH

THE METER OF THE POEM

Our epic was intended for recitation. Hence it was cast into poetry, since this is the most appealing and most effective method of expression for that purpose. Babylonian poetry, like Hebrew, has no rhyme, but it has rhythm, or meter. In accordance with the rules of Babylonian poetry, the lines fall into distichs, or couplets, as we can see, for example, from the fact that, where space permits it, the two verses forming a couplet are frequently written on the same line, separated by two small dividing wedges. The second line of a distich usually forms a contrast, a parallel, or a supplement to the first, as exemplified by the following lines of the creation story:

Tablet I:1–2: When above the heaven had not (yet) been named, (And) below the earth had not (yet) been called by a name;

Tablet I:25–26: Apsû could not diminish their clamor, And Ti’umât was silent in regard to their [behavior];

Tablet I:53–54: They went and reposed before Ti’umât; They took counsel concerning the gods, their first-born.

Quite frequently two distichs unite to form a quatrains, or a stanza of four lines. Compare, for example, Tablet I:37–40:

Their way has become painful to me, By day I cannot rest, by night I cannot sleep; I will destroy (them) and put an end to their way, That silence be established, and then let us sleep!

In our epic, each of the two lines, or verses, of a distich falls into halves, divided by a well-marked caesura, and each half of a line may again be divided into two parts, each of which contains, as a rule, a single accented word or phrase. In Enûma elish, as Benno Landsberger pointed out in a meeting of the Assyrian Dictionary staff, the final accent of a line usually rests on the second-last syllable, hardly ever on the last or the third-last syllable (on the last syllable are accented, e.g., Tablet IV: 19 and 49; on the third-last syllable, e.g., Tablets I:42 and 48; II:4 and 107; and III:58).

That this fourfold division of each line actually exists is clear from the tablet Sp. II. 265d— which, however, has nothing to do with the creation story—on which the scribe has drawn a vertical line not only after the half-verses but also after each quarter-verse. Some of the scribes who copied Enûma elish left a space between the halves of each line and so divided each verse into two main parts, thus indicating at least the caesura in the middle of each verse. This fourfold division of each line, together with its four accents, can well be illustrated by the first two verses of our poem:

---

\[ \text{enûma} \quad \text{elish} \quad \text{la nabhâ} \quad \text{shamânu} \]

\[ \text{sháplish} \quad \text{đimmamat} \quad \text{šâma} \quad \text{la zdarkâ}^2 \]

"ENûMA ELISH" AND THE NEW YEAR'S FESTIVAL

At the end of the fourth day of the New Year's celebration in Babylon, which lasted from the first to the eleventh of Nisan, Enûma elish was recited in its entirety by the high priest before the statue of Marduk. Then in the course of the festival, on an undetermined day, Enûma elish was again recited, or chanted. Parts of the epic may even have been dramatized, the king and the priests playing the roles of Marduk, Ti'amat, Kingu, and other figures in the story.

The reason for the second recitation of the epic is expressly stated in Keilschrifttexte aus Assur religiösen Inhalts, Nos. 143: 34 and 219: S: "Enûma elish which is recited before Bêl, which they chant in the month of Nisan, (it is) because he is held prisoner." The chanting of the epic is here apparently intended as a magical aid in Marduk's deliverance from imprisonment, the precise nature of which is not clear.

The reason for the first recitation, on the fourth of Nisan, is not given in any of the available cuneiform sources. We are therefore dependent on conjecture.

---

12 For more information on the meter in Babylonian poetry and for further references see Friedrich Dürkheim, Das Babylonische Weltbuch (Leipzig, 1896), pp. 60–68; L. W. King, The Seven Tablets of Creation, I, cxxv f; Meissner, op. cit., II, 152–55; and E. Sievern in Zeitschrift für Assyriologie, XXXVIII (1929), 1–38.

14 On the question of Marduk's death and resurrection see P. Jensen in Orientalistische Literaturzeitung, Vol. XXVII (1924), cols. 573–77, and Zimmern in Der alte Orient, XXV, 3 (1926), 14–16.

S. A. Pallis has suggested that the recital was for the purpose of exorcising all that is evil, just as the Babylonian creation myth "When Anu had created the heavens" was recited to keep away the evil influence of the demons during and after the restoration of the temple, by proclaiming the might and power of the gods (see p. 65 of this book). However, the proper time for a recital with this object in view would have been the first day of the festival, and it is unlikely that this ceremony was performed twice for the same purpose.

It is possible that on this occasion the epic was recited as a magic formula against the coming inundation of Babylonia caused by the rise of the Tigris and the Euphrates following the melting of the snows in the mountains of Armenia and Kurdistan; for at the time of these floods it seemed as if the primordial chaotic condition of "water, water everywhere" were to return. This possibility is suggested by Tablet VII:132–34: "May he subdue Ti'amat, may he distress her life, and may it be short! Until future (generations of) men, when the (present) days have grown old, may she retreat without hindrance, may she withdraw forever!" The recitation of Enûma elish presumably reflects the annual battle between Marduk and the watery chaos produced by the spring inundations.

On the other hand, it is also possible that the recitation and the supposed partial dramatization of Enûma elish were in honor of Marduk. For this was the festival of Marduk, the creator of the present world order; it was the season when the various gods of the land came to Babylon "to take the hands" of Marduk. At the same time it was probably the hope of the Babylonians that this manifestation of their devotion to the king of the gods would assure a more favorable destiny for their country, especially considering that it was during this festival, on the eighth and the ninth of Nisan, that the destinies of the land were determined for the ensuing year.
TABLET I

1. When above the heaven had not (yet) been named,\(^{18}\)
2. (And) below the earth had not (yet) been called by a name,\(^{18}\)
3. (When) Apsû primeval, their begetter,\(^{19}\)
4. Mummu,\(^{20}\) (and) Ti-àmat, she who gave birth to them all,
5. (Still) mingled their waters together,
6. And no pasture land had been formed (and) not (even) a reed marsh was to be seen;
7. When none of the (other) gods had been brought into being,
8. (When) they had not (yet) been called by (their) name(s, and their) destinies had not (yet) been fixed,
9. (At that time) were the gods created within them,\(^{21}\)
10. Lahûmu and Lahâmû came into being; they were called by (their) names.\(^{22}\)
11. Even before they had grown up (and) become tall,
12. Anshar and Kishar were created; they surpassed them (in stature).
13. They lived many days, adding years (to days).
14. Anu was their heir presumptive, the rival of his fathers;
15. Yeâ, Anu, his first-born, equaled Anshar,\(^{23}\)
16. And Anu begot Nudimmû,\(^{24}\) his likeness.
17. Nudimmû, the master of his fathers was he;\(^{25}\)
18. He was broad of understanding, wise, mighty in strength,
19. Much stronger than his grandfather, Anshar;
20. He had no rival among the gods his brothers.\(^{26}\)

\(^{18}\) I.e., did not yet exist as such.
\(^{19}\) I.e., the begetter of the gods.
\(^{20}\) On Mummu see the writer’s article in the Journal of Near Eastern Studies, VII (1948), 98–105.
\(^{21}\) Within Apsû and Ti-àmat.
\(^{22}\) This line shows that forms or beings can exist before they have been named.
\(^{24}\) Another name for Ea.
\(^{25}\) In the sense that his fathers were subject to his will, because of his great wisdom and his control over magie (Anton Deimel, Enuma Elish und Hexazêmeron [Rome, 1934], p. 30).
\(^{26}\) A variant has “fathers.”

TABLET I—Continued

21. The divine brothers gathered together.
22. They disturbed Ti-àmat and assaulted (?) their keeper;\(^{27}\)
23. Yea, they disturbed the inner parts of Ti-àmat,
24. Moving (and) running about in the divine abode(?).
25. Apsû could not diminish their clamor,
26. And Ti-àmat was silent in regard to their [behavior].
27. Yet, their doing was painful to them.
28. Their way was not good. . . .
29. Then Apsû, the begetter of the great gods,
30. Called Mummu, his vizier, and said to him:
31. “Mummu, my vizier, who gladdenest my heart,
32. Come, let us [go] to Ti-àmat!”
33. They went and reposed before Ti-àmat;
34. They took counsel about the matter concerning the gods, their first-born.
35. Apsû opened his mouth
36. And said to Ti-àmat in a loud voice:
37. “Their way has become painful to me,
38. By day I cannot rest, by night I cannot sleep;
39. I will destroy (them) and put an end to their way,
40. That silence be established, and then let us sleep!”
41. When Ti-àmat heard this,
42. She was wroth and cried out to her husband;
43. She cried out and raged furiously, she alone.
44. She pondered the evil in her heart (and said):
45. “Why should we destroy that which we ourselves have brought forth?
46. Their way is indeed very painful, but let us take it good-naturedly!”
47. Mummu spoke up and counseled Apsû;
48. [. . .] and unfavorable was the advice of his Mummu:
49. “Yes, my father, destroy (their) disorderly way;
50. (Then) verily thou shalt have rest by day (and) sleep by night!”

\(^{27}\) I.e., Apsû. For the phrase “their keeper” cf. Ps. 121:4, which has “the keeper of Israel.”
\(^{28}\) Reading i-na-shu i-nu-ru with A. Poebel.
TABLET I—Continued

51. When Apsû [hear]d it, his face grew bright,
52. Because of the evil he planned against the gods his children.
53. Mummu embraced [his] neck,
54. Sat down on his knee, and kissed him.
55. Whatever they planned in their assembly
56. Was communicated to the gods, their first-born.
57. When the gods heard (it), they hasten(ed) about;
58. They took to silence, they sat quietly.
59. The one of supreme understanding, the skilful (and) wise,
60. Ea, who understands everything, saw through their plan.28
61. He made and established against it a magical circle for all.
62. He skilfully composed his overpowering, holy incantation.
63. He recited it and thus caused (it) to be upon the water.29
64. He poured out sleep upon him, (so that) he slept soundly.30
65. When he had put Apsû to sleep, (Apsû) being suffused with sleep,
67. He loosened his band (and) tore off [his] tiara;
68. He carried off his splendor25 (and) put (it) on himself.32
69. When he had (thus) subdued Apsû, he slew him.
70. Mummu he shut in (and) barred (the door) against him.
71. On Apsû he established his dwelling place;

28 The plan of Apsû and Mummu. Ea realised its full consequences and knew how it could be foiled.
29 i.e., the sweet-water Apsû.
30 Reading, with Ebeling, tu-ub shi-tum, instead of tu-ub-qit-tum ("s cavern"), which does not give any sense.
31 Reading tam-la-ku, with A. Pcebel. In a synonym list published by W. von Soden, Die textkritischen Tafelserien der Babylonier und Assyrier in den Berliner Museen (Berlin, 1938), No. 2, col. iii, l. 102, tam-la-ku is equated with mil-lu, "advice," "adviser." Analogous formations are tam-brû, "merchant"; tēn-iqû, "suckling"; tar-bû, "fondling"; tar-ū, "successor"; tarp-īqû, "soundrel"; tambē-hu, "the third on the chariot"; etc.
32 In this and the preceding line the possessive pronominal form "his" refers to Apsû, not to Mummu, while only the vizier and as such was not entitled to wear a crown or a tiara.
33 Var.: (and) he, Es, put (it) on himself. With this line cf. Ps. 104:2.
96. When his lips moved, fire blazed forth.
97. Each of (his) four ears grew large,
98. And likewise (his) eyes, to see everything.
99. He was exalted among the gods, surpassing was (his) form;
100. His members were gigantic, he was surpassing in height.
101. Māriyūtu, Māriyūtu:
102. Son of the sun-god, the sun-god of the gods[.]86
103. He was clothed with the rays of ten gods, exceedingly powerful was he;
104. The error-inspiring majesty with its consuming brightness(?) rested upon him.
105. [. . . ] the four winds did Anu create,
106. To restrain with his [. . . ] the strong(est) of the host.37
107. He caused waves and disturbed Tā'amat.
108. Disturbed is Tā'amat, and day and night she (restlessly) hastens about.
109. 'The gods' were not at rest, carrying on(?) like the storm(?)
110. They planned evil in their heart(s).
111. They said to Tā'amat, their mother:47a
112. "When they slew Apsû, thy spouse,
113. Thou didst not march at his side, but thou didst sit quietly.48
114. He made . . . . fear.

86 With the translation of this line cf. Poebel's article in the American Journal of Semitic Languages and Literatures, LI (1934/35), 172. Line 101 contains a name of Marduk, while l. 102 offers an analysis and interpretation of the same after the method employed in Tablets VI and VII. We probably have here an exclamation by the poet or poets, which leads over to the following lines. There is no evidence that "the older deities greeted the new-born god Marduk" with this name (as against J. Lewy in Orientalia, XV [New ser., 1946], 380). Marduk appears in this passage not as a "new-born god" but as a full-grown god, as shown by the immediately preceding lines.
A7 According to the photo.
A8 Tā'amat took no part in Apsû and Mummû's struggle against the gods. And when she did engage in active hostilities, it was only to avenge Apsû, at the instigation of some of the gods, of whom Kingu was the ringleader (cf. Tablet VI: 29 f.), for which reason Tā'amat placed him in command of her forces.

115. Disturbed is thine interior, and we cannot rest.
116. Remember(?) Apsû, thy spouse,
117. And Mummû, who were vanquished; thou dwellest alone.49
118. Thou art [not a m[other], rest[less]]ly thou runnest about.
119. [. . . ] thou dost not love us (anymore).
120. [. . . ] . . . , our eyes are heavy.
121. [. . . ] without ceasing[?] let us sleep!
122. [Go to battle(?)] (and) require them!
123. [. . . ] and give (them) over to the storm!";
124. [When] Tī-āmat [heard it], the word pleased her,10
125. [And she said: "]. . . ]. . . let us make storm.
126. [. . . ] and the gods in the midst of [. . . ].
127. [. . . ] let us] make war, against the gods let us [. . . ]!
128. They [separated themselves(?)] and went to the side of Tī-āmat;
129. They [were angry], they plotted, not resting day or [night];
130. They [took up] the fight, fuming (and) raging;
131. They held a meeting and planned the conflict.
132. Mother Ḫubur,12 who fashions all things,
133. Added (thereto) irresistible weapons, bearing monster serpents
134. [Sharp] of tooth (and) not sparing the fang(?).
135. [With poison] instead of blood she filled [their] bodies.
136. Ferocious [dragons] she e[ltouched] with terror,
137. She crowned (them) with fear-inspiring glory (and) made (them) like gods,
138. So that he who would look upon them should p[e]rish from terror,
139. So that their bodies might leap forward and none turn back [their breasts].
140. She set up the viper, the dragon, and the laḫāmu.42

49 Var.: Dost thou not dwell alone?
42 Reading i-tēb el-āša.
44 Another designation for Tī-āmat, as is evident from a comparison of l. 154 with Tablet IV: 65-66 and 81. In the first passage Mother Ḫubur calls Kingu her spouse, while in the last two passages Kingu is spoken of as the spouse of Tī-āmat.
45 Here laḫāmu is some kind of monster and has nothing to do with the goddess Laḫāmu mentioned at the beginning of this tablet.
TABLET I—Continued

141. The great lion, the mad dog, and the scorpion-man,
142. Driving storm demons, the dragonfly, and the bis[on],
143. Bearing unsparing weapons, unafraid of bs[tile].
144. Powerful were her decrees, irresistible were they.
145. Altogether(?) eleven (kinds of monsters) of this sort she brought [into being].
146. Of those among the gods, her first-born, who formed her [assembly],
147. She exalted Kingu; in their midst she made him great.
148. To march at the head of the army, to direct the force[es],
149. To raise the weapons for the engagement, to launch the attack,
150. The high command of the battle,
151. She intrusted to his hand; she caused him to sit in the assem[bly], (saying:)
152. "I have cast the spell for thee, I have made thee great in the assembly of the gods.
153. The dominion over all the gods I have given into thy hand.
154. Mayest thou be highly exalted, thou, my unique spouse!
155. May thy names become greater than (those of) all the Anunnaki!"
156. She gave him the tablet of destinies, she fastened (it) upon his breast, (saying:)
157. "As for thee, thy command shall not be changed, [the word of thy mouth] shall be dependable!"
158. Now when Kingu had been exalted (and) had received [supreme dominion],
159. [They] decreed the destinies to the gods, her sons, (saying:)
160. "May the opening of your mouths [quiet] the fire-god!"

"A variant has the plural.

"For the translation of the two last terms see B. Landesbeger, Die Fauna des alten Mesopotamiens (Leipzig, 1934), pp. 123 and 93.

"Vor.: their first-born (i.e., Apšu and Ti'amat's).

"Kingu and Ti'amat (cf. Tablet II:46).

"The gods who had gone over to the side of Ti'amat (cf. also Tablet III:50 and 108).

"Probably Marduk (cf. Tablets I:96 and IV:39-40)."
TABLET II—Continued

11. “My father, Ti’amat, our bearer, hates us.
12. She held a meeting and raged furiously.
13. All the gods went over to her;
14. Even those whom ye have created march at her side.
15. They separated themselves (?) and went over to the side of Ti’amat;
16. They were angry, they plotted, not resting day or night;
17. They took up the fight, fuming and raging;
18. They held a meeting and planned the conflict.
19. Mother Hubur, who fashions all things,
20. Added (there too) irresistible weapons, bearing monster serpents
21. Sharp of tooth and not sparing the fang (?).
22. With poison instead of blood she filled their bodies.
23. Fearsome dragons she clothed with terror,
24. She crowned them with fear-inspiring glory (and) made them like gods,
25. So that he who would look upon them should perish from terror,
26. So that their bodies might leap forward and none turn back their breasts.
27. She set up the viper, the dragon, and the lahâmu,
28. The great lion, the mad dog, and the scorpion-man,
29. Driving storm demons, the dragonfly, and the bison,
30. Bearing unsearing weapons, unafraid of battle.
31. Powerful are her deities, irresistible are they.
32. Altogether (?) eleven (kinds of monsters) of this sort she brought into being.
33. Of those among the gods, her first-born, who formed her assembly,
34. She exalted Kingu; in their midst she made him great.
35. To march at the head of the army, to direct the forces,
36. To raise the weapons for the engagement, to launch the attack,
37. The high command of the battle,

A variant has “dragons.”
TABLET II—Continued

74. Whose [po]wer is [great], whose onslaught is irresistible,
75. [Go a]nd stand thou before Ti-Amat,
76. [That] her spirit [become quiet and] her heart calm down.
77. [If] she does not hearken to thy word,
78. Speak our [word(?)] to her, that she may be quieted.”
79. [When he had heard] the words of his father, Anshar,
80. [He took a direct route] to her and pursued the way to her.
81. Anu [drew nigh], but perceiving the (strategic) plan of Ti-Âmat.
82. And [not being able to withstand her], he turned back.43
83. [He went in terror to] his [father], Anshar.
84. [Concerning Ti-Âmat thus he] spoke to him:
85. “[..] . of her hand is . . . . upon me!”
86. Anshar lapsed into silence, looking upon the ground.
87. He shakes his locks,44 shaking his head at Ea.
88. All the Anunnaki were assembled at the place.
89. Their lips were closed, [they sat in] silence.
90. “No god whatever can go to battle
91. (And) escape [with his life] from the presence of Ti-Âmat.”
92. Lord Anshar, the father of the gods, [arose in] majesty;
93. His heart [prom]pted (him) [to speak to the Anunnaki]:
94. “[He] whose [strength] is mighty shall be the avenger of [his] father.
95. [That one is] the . . . . in battle, the valis[nt] Mar[duk]!”
96. Ea called [Marduk] to [his] private room;
97. [He ad]vised45 (him), telling him the plan46 of his heart:
98. “Marduk, consider my idea, hearken to thy father.
99. Thou art he, my son, who relieves his heart;
100. Draw nigh [into the presence of] Anshar, (ready) for battle(?);
101. [Speak and] stand forth; when he sees thee, he will be at rest.”

43 Cf. Tablet III:53.
44 See Landsberger apud Thureau-Dangin in Syria, XII (1931), 234, “L. 12.”
45 Reading [im]-ti-ka.
46 In this passage ma-ak is probably the apocopated construct of malkâ. The term seems to be used as a synonym of lêmu, occurring in the next line.

ENÚMA ELISH

TABLET II—Continued

102. The lord47 was glad at the word of his father;
103. He drew nigh and stood before Anshar.
104. When Anshar saw him, his heart was filled with joy;
105. He kissed his lips, his fear was removed.
106. “[Anshar], be not silent, (but) open thy lips;48
107. I will go and accomplish all that is in thy heart!
108. [Yea, Anshar], be not silent, (but) open thy lips;
109. I will go and accomplish all that is in thy heart!
110. What man is it who has brought battle against thee?
111. [. . . . T]i-Âmat, who is a woman, is coming against thee with arms!
112. [My father, creator, be glad and rejoice;
113. Soon thou shalt trample upon the neck of Ti-Âmat!
114. [Yea, my father, creator, be glad and rejoice;
115. Soon thou shalt trample upon [the neck of] Ti-Âmat!”
116. “My [so]n, who knoweth all wisdom,
117. Quiet [Ti-Âmat] with thy holy incantation.
118. On the storm [chariot(?)] quickly pursue (the way)!
119. [. . . .] . . . . turn (her) back!”
120. The lord [was glad] at the word of his father;
121. His heart [ex]ulted, and he said to his father:
122. “Lord of the gods, destiny of the great gods,49
123. If I am indeed to be your avenger,
124. To vanquish Ti-Âmat and to keep you alive,
125. Convene the assembly and proclaim my lot supreme.
126. When ye are joyfully seated together in the Court of Assembly,
127. May I through the utterance of my mouth determine the destinies, instead of50 you.

47 Marduk.
48 See Delitzsch’s posthumous article in Archiv für Orientforschung, VI (1930/31), 223.
49 I.e., the one who determines the destinies of the great gods.
50 Cf. Delitzsch, Das babylonische Weltschöpfungspos, pp. 134 f. In view of the two next lines and of Tablet IV:4–29, where Marduk’s destiny is made “supreme among the gods” and Marduk is given “kingship over the totality of the whole universe,” there can hardly be any doubt that ḫêmu here has the meaning “instead of.” Marduk demands supreme and undisputed authority as the price for
TABLET II—Continued

128. Whatever I create shall remain unaltered,
129. The command of my lips shall not return (void), it shall not be changed.”

CATCH LINE
Anshar opened his mouth

COLOPHON I
1. Second [tablet of] Enûma elish; [written] according to [the tablet]
2. [. . . ], a copy from Ashur.
3. [. . . . . . . . . . . . . . . . . . ].

COLOPHON II
1. Written [like] its [original] and collated. The tablet of Nabû-ahhê-iddina,
2. [The son of] Etir-bêl, the son of a priest of the god Mash.  61
One shall not withhold (it) from use.

TABLET III
1. Anshar opened his mouth
2. And addressed (these) words to Kaka, his vizier:
3. “Kaka, my vizier, who gladdenest my heart,
4. Unto Laḫmu (and) Laḫâmu I will send thee;
5. Thou knowest (how) to [disce]rn (and) art able to relate.
6. Cause the gods my fathers to be brought before me.
7. [Let] them bring all the gods to me!
8. Let them converse (and) sit down to a banquet.
9. Let them eat bread (and) prepare wine.  43 risking his life in combat with Tirâmat. When therefore the gods, at the New Year’s festival, convened in the Court of Assembly, “they reverently waited” on Marduk, the “king of the gods of heaven and earth,” and in that spirit they de-decided the destinies. The gods, indeed, “continue to ‘determine destinies’ long after Marduk has received the powers he here desires” (Jacobson in the Journal of Near Eastern Studies, II [1943], 170, n. 62); but the final decision rested with Marduk, so that in the last analysis it was he who decided the fates.

61 Another name for the warrior-god Ninurta.

43 The reference is probably to the preparation of wine for immediate use and greater enjoyment. The passage probably alludes to the widespread custom of mixing wine with spices before drinking it (cf. Ps. 75:9; Prov. 9:2; 23:30; Julian Obermann, Ugaritic Mythology [New Haven, 1948], p. 10; and Pliny Naturalis historia xiv. 19. 5). Cf. also the Greek custom of mixing wine with water in order to decrease its strength (Herodotus vi. 84). That the gods were to imbibe the wine is here taken for granted and is indicated by II. 125-30.
TABLET III—Continued

36. Altogether(?) eleven (kinds of monsters) of this sort she brought [into being].
37. Of those among the gods, her first-born, who formed her [assembly],
38. She exalted Kingu; in their midst she made [him great].
39. To march at the head of the army, to [direct the forces],
40. [To raise]e the weapons for the engagement, to launch the attack,
41. The high command of the battle,
42. [She intrusted] to his hand; she caused him to sit [in the assembly], (saying:)
43. 'I have cast the spell for thee, I have made thee great in the assembly of the gods.
44. The dominion over all the gods [I have given] into thy hand.
45. [Mayest] thou be highly exalted, [thou], my unique spouse!
46. May thy names become greater than (those of) the [Anunnaki]!'
47. She gave him the tablet of destinies, she fastened (it) upon his breast, (saying:)
48. 'As for thee, thy command shall not be changed, the word of thy mouth shall be dependable!'
49. Now when Kingu had been exalted (and) had received supreme dominion,
50. They decreed the destinies of the gods, her sons, (saying:)
51. 'May the opening of your mouths quiet the fire-god!
52. May thy overpowering poison vanquish the (opposing) might!'
53. I sent Anu, (but) he could not face her.
54. Nudimmud (also) was afraid and turned back.
55. (Then) Marduk, the wisest of the gods, your son, came forward.
56. His heart prompted (him) to face Ti'amat.
57. He opened his mouth (and) said to me:
58. 'If I am indeed to be your avenger,
59. To vanquish Ti'amat and to keep you alive,
60. Convene the assembly and proclaim my lot supreme.
61. When ye are joyfully seated together in the Court of Assembly,
62. May I through the utterance of my mouth determine the destinies, instead of you.
63. Whatever I create shall remain unaltered,
64. The command of my lips shall not return (void), it shall not be changed.'
65. Hasten to me (then) and speedily fix for him your destiny,
66. That he may go to meet your powerful enemy!''
67. Kaka went and pursued his way.
68. Before La'amu and La'âmu, the gods his ancestors,
69. He prostrated himself and kissed the ground at their feet;
70. He sat up, stood forth, and said to them:
71. "Anshar, your son, has sent me.
72. The command of his heart he has charged me to convey,
73. Saying: 'Ti'amat, our bearer, hates us.
74. She held a meeting and raged furiously.
75. All the gods went over to her;
76. Even those whom ye have created march at her side.
77. They separated themselves(?) and went over to the side of Ti'amat;
78. They were angry, they plotted, not resting day or night;
79. They took up the fight, fuming and raging;
80. They held a meeting and planned the conflict.
81. Mother Ḫubur, who fashions all things,
82. Added (thereto) irresistible weapons, bearing monster serpents
83. Sharp of tooth and not sparing the fang(?).
84. With poison instead of blood she filled their bodies.
85. Ferocious dragons she clothed with terror,
86. She crowned them with fear-inspiring glory (and) made them like gods,
87. So that he who would look upon them should perish from terror,
88. So that their bodies might leap forward and none turn back their breasts.
TABLET III—Continued

89. She set up the viper, the dragon, and the laḫamu,
90. The great lion, the mad dog, and the scorpion-man,
91. Driving storm demons, the dragonfly, and the bison,
92. Bearing unsparring weapons, unafraid of battle.
93. Powerful are her decrees, irresistible are they.
94. Altogether (?) eleven (kinds of monsters) of this sort she brought into being.
95. Of those among the gods, her first-born, who formed her assembly,
96. She exalted Kingu; in their midst she made him great.
97. To march at the head of the army, to direct the forces,
98. To raise the weapons for the engagement, to launch the attack,
99. The high command of the battle,
100. She intrusted to his hand; she caused him to sit in the assembly, (saying:)
101. “I have cast the spell for thee, I have made thee great in the assembly of the gods.
102. The dominion over all the gods I have given into thy hand.
103. Mayest thou be highly exalted, thou, my unique spouse!
104. May thy names become greater than (those of) the Anunnaki!”
105. She gave him the tablet of destinies, [she fastened (it) upon his breast], (saying:)
106. “As for thee, thy command shall not [be changed, the word of thy mouth shall be dependable]!”
107. Now when Kingu had been exalted (and) had received supreme dominion,
108. [They decreed] the des[tinies] to the gods, her sons, (saying:)
109. “[May] the opening of your mouths [quiet the fire-god]!
110. [May] thy overpowering poison [vanquish] the (opposing) might!”
111. I sent Anu, (but) he [could] not [face her].
112. Nudimmud (also) was afraid and [turned back].

A variant has the plural.

ENÚMA ELISH

TABLET III—Continued

113. (Then) Marduk, the wisest of [the gods, your son], came forward.
114. [His heart prompted (him)] to face Ti- amat.
115. He opened his mouth (and) [said to me]:
116. “If I am indeed to be [your avenger],
117. To vanquish Ti- amat (and) [to keep you alive],
118. Convene the assembly and [proclaim my lot supreme],
119. [When ye are joyfully seated together] in the Court of Assembly,
120. [May I] through the utterance of my mouth [determine the destinies], instead of [you],
121. Whatever I create shall remain unaltered,
122. The command of [my lips] shall not return (void), it shall [not be changed].”
123. Hasten to me (then) and speedily [fix for him] your dest-
124. [That he may] go to meet your powerful enemy!”
125. When Laḫḫu44 (and) Laḫamu heard (this), they cried aloud;
126. All the Igigi wailed painfully:
127. “What has happened that she has come to [such a decision?]
128. We do not understand Ti- amat’s ac[tion]!”
129. They gathered together and departed,
130. All the great gods who determine [the destinies],
131. They entered into the presence of Anshar and filled [the Court of Assembly];
132. They kissed one another [as they came together] in the assembly;
133. They conversed (and) [sat down] to a banquet.
134. They ate bread (and) prepared w[ine].
135. The sweet wine dispelled their fears,46

44 I.e., Laḫmu.
46 Reading u-ša-an-ni piṭ-ra-di-shu-[un] and regarding usammi as an Assyrian form for wâšammi. We may compare here the phrase šamāt ša ḫimi, for which see Meissner in Mitteilungen der allorientalischen Gesellschaft, XI, Heft 1/2 (1937), 73 ff.
136. [Their] bod[i][es] swelled as they drank the strong drink.
137. Exceedingly carefree were they, their spirit was exalted.48
138. For Marduk, their avenger, they decreed the destiny.49

CATCH LINE
They erected for him a lordly throne-dais.

TABLET IV
1. They erected for him a lordly throne-dais,48
2. And he took his place before his fathers to (receive) sovereignty.
3. “Thou art (the most) important among the great gods;
4. Thy destiny is unequaled, thy command is (like that of) Anu.49
5. Marduk, thou art (the most) important among the great gods,
6. Thy destiny is unequaled, thy command is (like that of) Anu.
7. From this day onward thy command shall not be changed.
8. To exalt and to abase—this shall be thy power!
9. Dependable shall be the utterance of thy mouth, thy command shall not prove vain.
10. None among the gods shall infringe upon thy prerogative.79
11. Maintenance is the requirement of the sanctuaries of the gods;
12. And so at (each) place of their shrines shall be appointed a place for thee.
13. Marduk, thou art our avenger;
14. To thee we have given kingship over the totality of the whole universe,
15. So that when thou sittest in the assembly, thy word shall be exalted.
16. May thy weapons not miss, may they smite thy foes.
17. O lord, preserve the life of him who puts his trust in thee;
18. But as for the god who has espoused evil, pour out his life!”71
19. Then they placed a garment in their midst;
20. To Marduk, their first-born, they said:
22. Command to destroy and to create, (and) they shall be!
23. By the word of thy mouth, let the garment be destroyed;
24. Command again, and let the garment be whole!”
25. He commanded with his mouth, and the garment was destroyed.
26. He commanded again, and the garment was restored.73
27. When the gods his fathers beheld the power of his word,74
28. They were glad (and) did homage, (saying:) “Marduk is king!”
29. They bestowed upon him the scepter, the throne, and the royal robe(?)
30. They gave him an irresistible weapon smiting the enemy, (saying:)
31. “Go and cut off the life of Ti-\textit{amat}.
32. May the winds carry her blood to out-of-the-way places.”78
33. After the gods his fathers had determined the destiny of Bel.76

71 The expression “to pour out the life of someone” is taken from the pouring-out or shedding of blood, the seat of the element of life.
72 Thy power and authority.
73 There is no proof that Marduk reduced the garment to nothing in the strict sense and that he then re-created it out of nothing. As far as available evidence is concerned, the dogma of a \textit{creatio ex nihilo} was not shared by the Babylonians and Assyrians. The import of this passage in all likelihood is simply that at Marduk’s first command the garment was torn to shreds and that at his second command it was fully restored to its former condition.
74 \textit{Lit.} the issue of his mouth.
75 Cf. 1. 132.
76 I.e., Marduk.

49 I.e., they made him lord of the gods, in conformity with his demands (Tables II:122–29 and IV:1–18).
49 The sky-god and at one time the highest god of the pantheon.
70 \textit{Lit.} overstep thy boundary.
TABLET IV—Continued

34. They set him on the road—the way to success and attainment.
35. He made a bow and decreed (it) as his weapon;
36. An arrowhead he put (on the arrow and) fastened the bowstring to it.\(^77\)
37. He took up the club and grasped (it) in his right hand;
38. The bow and the quiver he hung at his side.
39. The lightning he set before him;
40. With a blazing flame he filled his body.\(^78\)
41. He made a net to inclose Ti\-\text{amat} within (it),
42. (And) had the four winds take hold that nothing of her might escape;
43. The south wind, the north wind, the east wind, (and) the west wind,
44. The gift of his (grand)father, Anu, he caused to draw nigh to the border(s) of the net.
45. He created the im\text{ullu}: the evil wind, the cyclone, the hurricane,
46. The fourfold wind, the sevenfold wind, the whirlwind, the wind incomparable.
47. He sent forth the winds which he had created, the seven of them;
48. To trouble Ti\-\text{amat} within, they arose behind him.
49. The lord raised the rain flood,\(^79\) his mighty weapon.
50. He mounted (his) irresistible, terrible storm chariot;
51. He harnessed for it a team of four and yoked (them) to it,
52. The Destructive, the Pitiless, the Trampler,\(^80\) the Flier.
53. They were sharp of tooth, bearing poison;
\(^77\) To the bow.
\(^78\) The scene is reminiscent of Exod. 10:16-18.
\(^79\) The term \text{ab\text{u}}, “rain flood,” “cloudburst,” or the like, has been treated by Jensen in Reallexikon der Assyriologie, I, 11-13. As Jensen points out, there are passages in which \text{ab\text{u}} denotes also a mythical being of some kind. But there is no warrant for rendering this expression by “dragon” (as against W. F. Albright in the Journal of Biblical Literature, LXII [1943], 370). The fact that a passage in Sargon’s Eighth Campaign speaks of an \text{ab\text{u}} with wings proves nothing for the dragon nature of the \text{ab\text{u}}. Cf. the winged bulls of Assyria, the winged horse Peg
\(^80\) See Landsberger in Zeitschrift für Assyriologie, XLIII (1936), 75, “Z. 60.”

TABLET IV—Continued

54. They knew how to destroy, they had learned to overrun;
55. [ . . . ] they [smo]te, they were frightful in battle;
56. To the left [ . . . ].
57. He was clad in a terrifying coat of mail;
58. Terror-inspiring splendor he wore on his head.
59. The lord took a direct (route) and pursued his way;
60. Toward the place of raging Ti\-\text{amat} he set his face.
61. Between his lips he holds [a talisman(?)] of red paste;
62. An herb to destroy the poison he grasped in his hand.
63. Then the gods r[un] about him, the gods run about him;
64. The gods his fathers run about him, the gods run about him.
65. The lord drew nigh to look into the heart of Ti\-\text{amat},
66. (And) to see the plan of Kingu, her spouse.
67. As he\(^81\) gases, (Kingu) is confused in his plan;
68. Destroyed is his will and disordered his action.
69. As for the gods his helpers, who were marching at his side,
70. When they saw the valiant hero, their vision became blurred.
71. Ti\-\text{amat} set up a ‘roar(?)’ without turning her neck,
72. Upholding with her [lips] (her) meanness(?) (and) rebellion.\(^82\)
73. “[ . . . ] . . . have the gods risen up to thee?
74. (Or) have they gathered from their [place] to thy place?”\(^83\)
75. Then the lord [raised] the rain flood, his mighty weapon.
76. [As for Ti\-\text{amat}, who was furious, thus he answered her:]
77. “[In arrogance(?)] thou art risen (and) hast highly exalted thyself(?)
78. [Thou hast caused] thy heart to plot the stirring-up of conflict.
79. [ . . . ] the sons treat their fathers unjustly;
\(^81\) Marduk.
\(^82\) Cf. Jensen in Orientalistische Literaturzeitung, Vol. XXVIII (1925), col. 23.
\(^83\) I interpret Ti\-\text{amat’s} remark to mean: “Have the gods ascended to your level or have they descended to your level?”
\(^84\) For ll. 75-83 see the fragment published by E. F. Weidner in Archiv für Orien tforschung, III (1926), 122-24.
TABLET IV—Continued

80. (And) thou, their bearer, dost hate (them) without cause?]
81. Thou hast exalted Kingu to be [thy] spouse;
82. Thine illegal [authority] thou hast set up in place of the authority of Anu.
83. [Against] Anshar, the king of the gods, thou seest evil,
84. And hast proven thy wickedness [against the gods]s my fathers.
85. Let thine army be equipped! let them be girded with thy weapons!
86. Come thou forth (alone) and let us, me and thee, do single combat!"
87. When Ti-šamât heard this,
88. She became like one in a frenzy (and) lost her reason.
89. Ti-šamât cried out loud (and) furiously,
90. To the (very) roots her two legs shook back and forth.
91. She recites an incantation, repeatedly casting her spell;
92. As for the gods of battle, they sharpen their weapons.
93. Ti-šamât (and) Marduk, the wisest of the gods, advanced against one another;
94. They pressed on to single combat, they approached for battle.
95. The lord spread out his net and enmeshed her;
96. The evil wind, following after, he let loose in her face.
97. When Ti-šamât opened her mouth to devour him,
98. He drove in the evil wind, in order that (she should) not be able to close her lips.
99. The raging winds filled her belly;
100. Her belly became distended, and she opened wide her mouth.
101. He shot off an arrow, and it tore her interior;
102. It cut through her inward parts, it split (her) heart.
103. When he had subdued her, he destroyed her life;
88 Reading id-ša-pu.

This translation I owe to Landeberger, who, in one of his contributions to the Assyrian Dictionary files of the Oriental Institute, reads in-ni-ši, from esšu, which he renders "auflähen," "schwellen." R. Campbell-Thompson in Revue d’assyriologie, XXVI (1929), 54, took this verb in the sense of "to be constricted, compressed."

ENÔMA ELISH

TABLET IV—Continued

104. He cast down her carcass (and) stood upon it.
105. After he had slain Ti-šamât, the leader,
106. Her band broke up, her host dispersed.87
107. As for the gods her helpers, who marched at her side,
108. They trembled for fear (and) faced about.88
109. They tried to break away to save their lives,
110. (But) they were completely surrounded, (so that) it was impossible to flee.
111. He imprisoned them and broke their weapons.
112. In the net they lay and in the snare they were;
113. They hid in the corners (and) were filled with lamentation;
114. They bore his wrath, being confined in prison.
115. As for the eleven (kinds of) creatures which she had laden with terror-inspiring splendor,
116. The host of demons that marched impetuously before her,
117. He cast (them) into fetters (and) [tied()] their arms together();
118. With (all) their resistance, [he] trampled (them) underfoot.
119. As for Kingu, who had become chief among them,
120. He bound him and counted him among the dead gods.89 a The following lines treat of three different kinds of gods composing Ti-šamât’s fighting force: ll. 107–14 speak of the gods who had gone over to Ti-šamât; ll. 115–18 refer to the eleven kinds of divine monsters which Ti-šamât had created; and ll. 119–21 deal with Kingu, Ti-šamât’s new husband and general. All these gods were imprisoned and hence are called the “captive gods” (l. 127).

88 Lit.: they turned their back.
89 See A. L. Oppenheim in Orientia, XVI (New ser., 1947), 229, n. 2. By the “dead” gods is doubtless meant all the imprisoned deities mentioned in ll. 107–21. They were not actually put to death but had been vanquished and reduced to extreme misery, which the Mesopotamians regarded as tantamount to death. That they were not killed is clear from l. 127, according to which Marduk “strengthened his hold upon the captive gods,” and from Tablet VI, which pictures Kingu as being still among the living. In fact, the gods referred to in the opening line of Tablet VI are in all likelihood the imprisoned deities enumerated in Tablet IV: 107–21. They are not called “captive gods” or the like in Tablet VI presumably because their identity was unmistakable in the light of the now missing portion of Tablet V. It was upon them that “the service of the gods” had originally been imposed; but, after listening to their petition, Marduk, “the merciful” (Tablet VII: 30), decided to create man, to place him in charge of this service, to relieve the defeated
THE BABYLONIAN GENESIS

TABLET IV—Continued

121. He took from him the tablet of destinies, which was not his rightful possession.
122. He sealed (it) with (his) seal and fastened (it) on his breast.
123. After he had vanquished (and) subdued his enemies,
124. Had overpowered the arrogant foe like a bull (?),
125. Had fully established Anshar's victory over the enemy,
126. Had attained the desire of Nudimmud, the valiant Marduk.

127. Strengthened his hold upon the captive gods;
128. And then he returned to Tiamat, whom he had subdued.
129. The lord trod upon the hinder part of Tiamat,
130. And with his unsparing club he split (her) skull.
131. He cut the arteries of her blood
132. And caused the north wind to carry (it) to out-of-the-way places.
133. When his fathers saw (this), they were glad and rejoiced
134. (And) sent him dyes (and) greeting-gifts.
135. The lord rested, examining her dead body,
136. To divide the abortion (and) to create ingenious things (therewith).
137. He split her open like a mussel (?) into two (parts);
138. Half of her he set in place and formed the sky (therewith) as a roof.
139. He fixed the crossbar (and) posted guards;
140. He commanded them not to let her waters escape.

* Lit.: he seized (it) with his breast.

Marduk carried out his father’s plan and thus succeeded where Ea had failed.

* I.e., Anshar, Ea, and the other older gods.

* See Thureau-Dangin in Revue d'assyriologie, XIX (1922), 81 f. The monstrous corpse of Tiamat is here compared to a thing as repulsive as an abortion.

* I.e., the waters of Tiamat which were contained in that half of her body which Marduk used in the construction of the sky.

ENûMA Elish

TABLET IV—Continued

141. He crossed the heavens and examined the regions.
142. He placed himself opposite the Apsû, the dwelling of Nudimmud.
143. The lord measured the dimensions of the Apsû,
144. And a great structure, its counterpart, he established, (namely,) Esharra,
145. The great structure Esharra which he made as a canopy.
146. Anu, Enlil, and Ea he (then) caused to inhabit their residences.

CATCH LINE

He created stations for the great gods.

COLOPHON

1. 146 lines. Fourth tablet of Enûma elish. Incomplete.
2. Written according to a tablet whose text was crossed out.
3. Nabû-bēlshu, (the son of) Naṣîd-Marduk, the son of a smith, wrote (it) for the life of his soul.
4. And the life of his house and deposited (it) in (the temple) Ezida.

* I.e., the counterpart of the Apsû.

* Esharra in this passage is a poetic designation of the earth, which is pictured as a great structure, in the shape of a canopy, placed over the Apsû. For this interpretation see Jensen, Die Kosmologie der Babylonier (Strassburg, 1890), pp. 195–201, and Assyrisch-babylonische Mythen und Epiken (Berlin, 1900), pp. 344 f.; Morris Jastrow, Jr., The Religion of Babylonia and Assyria (Boston, 1898), pp. 450–52. The import of the second half of this line cannot be that Marduk at this time created the sky, for the sky was made already in 1. 138.

* Now that heaven and earth were completed, Anu, Enlil, and Ea, at the instance of Marduk, occupied their residences, which must not be confused with the stations mentioned in the next tablet, for these were set up later, as is evident from Tablet V:7–8. Anu occupied the sky, Enlil the air and the surface of the earth, and Ea the sweet waters in and on the earth. Enlil was god not only of the air but also of the surface of the earth, as is attested by the fact that in the Gilgamesh Epic, Tablet XI:41, Babylonia (or a certain area thereof) is called “the land of Enlil,” and by his titles “lord of the land,” “lord of the whole land,” “lord of the lands,” and “king of the lands.” Before the creation of the earth, Ea lived in his Apsû, the building of which is recorded in Tablet I. Now he took possession of those areas which he occupied in historic times, viz., all the sweet waters on and below the surface of the earth, his realm embracing the waters in the underground strata, the wells and springs, the rivers, lagoons, and marshes.

* I.e., the series is still incomplete; Tablets V–VII are yet to come.
TABLET V

1. He created stations for the great gods;
2. The stars their likeness(es), the signs of the zodiac, he set up.
3. He determined the year, defined the divisions;
4. For each of the twelve months he set up three constellations.
5. After he had defined the days of the year [by means] of constellations,
6. He founded the station of Nibiru\(^{99}\) to make known their duties(?)\(^{100}\).
7. That none might go wrong (and) be remiss,
8. He established the stations of Enlil and Ea\(^{101}\) together with it.
9. He opened gates on both sides,\(^{102}\)
10. And made strong lock(s) to the left and to the right.
11. In the very center thereof he fixed the zenith.
12. The moon he caused to shine forth; the night he intrusted (to her).
13. He appointed her, the ornament of the night, to make known the days.
14. "Monthly without ceasing go forth\(^{103}\) with a tiara.

\(^{99}\) Nibiru = Jupiter (see A. Schott in Zeitschrift für Assyriologie, XLIII [1936], 124-45).
\(^{100}\) I.e., the duties(?) of the days.
\(^{101}\) The station (i.e., the way or path) of Enlil corresponds to the northern band of the celestial vault, and that of Ea to the southern band. A variant has, probably by mistake, "Enlil and Anu." The way of Anu is the equatorial band, about sixteen and a half degrees to each side of the equator (see J. Schaumberger in F. X. Kugler, Sternkunde und Sterndienst in Babel, 3. Ergänzungsheft [Münster i.W., 1935], pp. 332 f.).
\(^{102}\) "Together with it" means as much as "beside it," i.e., beside the station of Nibiru, whose station lay between those of Enlil and Ea and came within the sphere of Anu (see Schott in Zeitschrift für Assyriologie, XLIII, 144, and Schaumberger in Kugler, op. cit., p. 330).
\(^{103}\) By the two sides is meant east and west, called "left and right" in the next line. The gates refer to the mythological gates at sunrise and sunset through which the sun-god was believed to come out in the morning and leave in the evening.
\(^{104}\) Reading 4-mu\text{sh}, the I, 1 imperative of nam\text{esh}u, as suggested by Meisner in Sitzungsberichte der Preussischen Akademie der Wissenschaften (Phil.-hist. Klasse, 1931), p. 386, n. 1.

ENŬMA ELISH

TABLET V—Continued

15. At the beginning of the month, namely, of the rising o(ver) the land,
16. Thou shalt shine with horns to make known six days;
17. On the seventh day with [hal]lf a tiara.
18. At the full moon thou shalt stand in opposition (to the sun), in the middle of each [month].\(^{106}\)
19. When the sun has [overtaken] thee on the foundation of heaven,\(^{106}\)
20. Decrease [the tiara of full] light\(^{107}\) and form (it) backward.
21. [At the period of invisibility draw near to the way of the sun,
22. And on [the twenty-ninth] thou shalt stand in opposition to the sun a second time\(^{108}\).
23. [. . .] omen, enter upon her way.
24. [. . .] aproach and render judgment.
25. [. . .] to violate.
26. [. . .] to me.”

(Catch Line)

As [Marduk] hears [the words] of the gods.

COLOPHON

Fifth tablet (of) Enûma elish.

Palace of Ashurbanipal, king of the world, king of Assyria.

\(^{99}\) The date of the appearance of the full moon in the Babylonian sense fluctuates between the twelfth and the sixteenth of the month (see Schaumberger in Kugler, op. cit., p. 261).
\(^{100}\) I.e., on the horizon.
\(^{101}\) Reading with some doubt [apī tashrištā].
\(^{102}\) S. Langdon, The Babylonian Epic of Creation (Oxford, 1923), p. 162, n. 2; "The Babylonians spoke of two oppositions of the moon, the first (in line 18) at the full moon directly opposite the sun, and the second when the moon stood between the earth and the sun at the end of the period of invisibility (28th–29th days of the month), just before the sun overtakes it on the western horizon before sunset (new moon)."
TABLE VI

1. As [Mar]duk hears the words of the gods,\(^{109}\)
2. His heart prompts (him) to create ingenious things.
3. He conveys his idea to Ea,
4. Imparting the plan [which] he had conceived in his heart:
5. “Blood\(^{110}\) will I form and cause bone to be;
6. Then will I set up lullā, ‘Man’ shall be his name!
7. Yes, I will create lullā: Man!
8. (Upon him) shall the services of the gods be imposed that they may be at rest.
9. Moreover, I will ingeniously arrange the ways of the gods.\(^{111}\)
10. They shall be honored alike, but they shall be divided into two (groups).”
11. Ea answered him, speaking a word to him,
12. To make him change his mind concerning the relief of the gods:
13. “Let a brother of theirs be delivered up;
14. Let him be destroyed and men be fashioned.
15. Let the great gods assemble hither,
16. Let the guilty one be delivered up, and let them\(^{112}\) be established.”
17. Marduk assembled the great gods,
18. Ordering (them) kindly (and) giving instructions.
19. The gods pay attention to his word,
20. As the king addresses a word to the Anunnaki, (saying:)
21. “Verily, the former thing which we declared unto you has come true!\(^{113}\)

\(^{109}\) For ll. 1–26 cf. the fragment published by Erich Ebeling in Mitteilungen der allorientalischen Gesellschaft, XII, Heft 4 (1939), 26. With the entire tablet are to be compared W. von Boden’s notes in Zeitschrift für Assyriologie, XLVI (1941), 3–8.

\(^{110}\) Da-mi = dāmi or dāmi, i.e., the acc. pl. of dāmu (cf. Hebrew dāmîm, “bloods” or “drops of blood”).

\(^{111}\) Cf. ll. 39–44. By the “ways” of the gods is meant the relationships and positions of the gods.

\(^{112}\) The other gods who had gone over to Ti‘amât.

\(^{113}\) In this line Marduk refers to his prediction of Ti‘amât’s speedy end (Tablet II: 106–15).

TABLE VI—Continued

22. (Also now) I speak the truth under an oath(?) by myself.\(^{114}\)
23. Who was it that created the strife,
24. And caused Ti‘amât to revolt and prepare for battle?
25. Let him who created the strife be delivered up;
26. I will make him bear his punishment, be ye at rest.”
27. The Igigi, the great gods, answered him,\(^{115}\)
28. The “king of the gods of heaven and earth,” the counselor of the gods, their lord:
29. “Kingu it was who created the strife,\(^{116}\)
30. And caused Ti‘amât to revolt and prepare for battle.”
31. They bound him and held him before Ea;
32. Punishment they inflicted upon him by cutting (the arteries of) his blood.
33. With his blood they created mankind;
34. He\(^{117}\) imposed the services of the gods (upon them) and set the gods free.\(^{118}\)
35. After Ea, the wise, had created mankind,
36. (And) they had imposed the service of the gods upon them\(^{119}\)—
37. That work was not suited to (human) understanding;
38. In accordance with the ingenious plans of Marduk did Nudimmud\(^{120}\) create (it)—,
39. Marduk, the king, divided
40. The totality of the Anunnaki above and below;\(^{121}\)
41. He assigned (them) to Anu, to guard his decrees.
42. Three hundred he set in the heavens as a guard.
43. Moreover, the ways of (the gods of) the earth he defined.

\(^{114}\) Marduk, shifting from the pluralis majestatis to the first person singular, here alludes to the promise he is about to make in l. 26.

\(^{115}\) According to l. 20, Marduk addressed his question to the Anunnaki; but here the Igigi furnish the answer. The names “Anunnaki” and “Igigi” are either used interchangeably in this passage or the Igigi are included among the Anunnaki. On these two groups of gods see Tallqvist, op. cit., pp. 265 and 323.

\(^{116}\) For ll. 29–31 see Weidner’s article in Archiv für Orientforschung, XI (1930/37), 72–74.

\(^{117}\) Ea.

\(^{118}\) The other rebel gods.

\(^{119}\) I.e., Ea.

\(^{120}\) Lit.: upon him (viz., upon man).

\(^{121}\) Cf. l. 10.
44. In heaven and in earth six hundred he caused to dwell.\textsuperscript{122}
45. After he had issued all the decrees,
46. (And) to the Anunnaki of heaven and earth had allotted their portions,
47. The Anunnaki opened their mouth(s)
48. And said to Marduk, their lord:
49. "Now, O lord, who hast established our freedom from compulsory service,\textsuperscript{123}
50. What shall be the sign of our gratitude before thee?
51. Come, let us make (something) whose name shall be called 'Sanctuary.'
52. It shall be a dwelling for our rest at night; come, let us repose therein!
53. There let us erect a throne dais, a seat with a back support!
54. On the day that we arrive,\textsuperscript{124} we will repose in it."\textsuperscript{124a}
55. When Marduk heard this,
56. His countenance shone exceedingly, [like] the day, (and he said):
57. "(So?) shall Babylon be, whose construction ye have desired;
58. Let its brickwork be fashioned, and call (it) a sanctuary.'
59. The Anunnaki wielded the hoe.
60. One year they made bricks for it;
61. When the second year arrived,
62. They raised the head of Esagila\textsuperscript{125} on high, level with the \textit{Apsû}.
63. After they had built the lofty stagetower of the \textit{Apsû},
64. They established an abode therein(? for Marduk, Enlil,
(and) Ea.
65. He\textsuperscript{127} sat down before them in majesty, \textsuperscript{122} By the Anunnaki of the earth are meant the Anunnaki of the underworld.

\textsuperscript{123} On this translation of \textit{shubarrû} see F. M. Th. Böhl in \textit{Mitteilungen der allorien\textsuperscript{124} For the New Year's festival.
\textsuperscript{124a} In the sanctuary.
\textsuperscript{125} The temple of Marduk with its stagetower.
\textsuperscript{126} The meaning of this line appears to be that the foundation of Esagila reached down as far as the waters of the \textit{Apsû}. Hence the stagetower could be called "the lofty stagetower of the \textit{Apsû}" (I. 69).
\textsuperscript{127} Marduk.
88. He named the names of the bow as follows:
89. "Longwood is the first (name); the second is ... ."
90. Its third name is Bow-Star; in heaven [ ... ].
91. He established its place [ ... ].
92. After [he had determined] the destinies of [the Bow-Star],
93. He set up a throne [ ... ].
94. A second one (?) in heaven [ ... ].
95. [The great gods gathered] [ ... ].
96. [ ... ] Marduk [ ... ].
97–98. (Almost completely destroyed)
99. He gave him [ ... ].
100. For the dominion over the god(s(?)) [ ... ].
101. He made surpassing [ ... ].
102. For his names [ ... ].
103. He opened [his] mouth [and ... ]:
104. "At his command [ ... ] shall be supreme [ ... ].
105. Let him be highly exalted [ ... ].
106. Let his high-priesthood be supreme [ ... ].
107. Let him exercise shepherdship over mankind, [his] creatures(?).
108. Throughout the days to come let them, without forgetting, make mention of [his deeds(?)].
109. Let him establish great offerings for his fathers;
110. Let them provide for their maintenance (and) let them take care of their sanctuaries.\(^{130}\)
111. May he provide (the gods) with burnt offerings to smell; their incantations may be [ ... ].
112. A likeness of what he made (?) in heaven [let him make(?)] on earth.
113. Let him teach mankind to 'fear him(?).'
114. Let the subjects be ever mindful of their god (and) their goddess.
115. At the opening of his mouth, let them pay attention to (their) goddess.
116. Let offerings be brought for their god (and) their goddess;\(^{130}\) Reading esh-ir2-su-un (with Landsberger opud von Soden in Zeitschrift für Assyriologie, XI, 227).

117. Let their god be not forgotten, (but) let them support (him).
118. Let them make their land shine by building shrines for themselves.
119. Let mankind stand (in awe) before our god.
120. As for us, by as many a name as we have called (him), he shall be our god.\(^{131}\)
121. Come, let us proclaim his fifty names!\(^{132}\)
122. Let his ways shine forth in glory, let his deeds be corresponding.
123. Marduk (is the name) which Anu, his (grand)father, called him from his birth;
124. The provider of pasture land and drinking places, who fills their stalls with plenty;
125. Who with his weapon, the rain flood, overcame the enemies;
126. Who saved the gods his fathers in distress.
127. Verily, the sun-child of the gods, the radiant one, is he!\(^{133}\)
128. In the brightness of his bright light let them walk about constantly.
129. (Upon) the people, whom he created . . . ,
130. He\(^{134}\) imposed the services of the gods, and they were set at ease.
131. At his command let there be creation, destruction, alleviation, mercy;
132. As the Babylonians had their tutelary or personal gods, on whom they depended in a special way, so the various deities of the Babylonian pantheon had their tutelary god—Marduk.
133. The last two lines probably mean that the gods have called Marduk by the following names among themselves, i.e., that they have decided on these names and that they are now going to proclaim them or make them known publicly. For a discussion of the fifty names of Marduk see Böhl's article in Archiv für Orientforschung, XI, 191–218.
134. A variant has: "Verily, the sun-child, who is radiant among the gods, is he!" "Sun-child" is not a new name, as we can discern from the fact that in 1. 157 it is not counted as a separate name, for otherwise the total would be ten instead of nine; it is merely a further explanation of or play upon the name "Marduk" (cf. Tablet I: 101–2).
135 Var.: they (i.e., Marduk and Ea).
TABLE VI—Continued

132. Let them look upon him.
133. Maruku\textsuperscript{136} verily is the god, the creator of every thing;
134. Who gladdened the hearts of the Anunnaki, who put their [minds] at ease.
135. Marutuku\textsuperscript{136} verily is the refuge of the land, the protector of his [people];
136. Him the people shall praise [. . .].
137. Barashakushu\textsuperscript{138} stood up and seized the reins (of the land);
138. Wide is his heart, (all-)embracing [his] mind.
139. Lugaldimmeranka\textsuperscript{137} is his name which we named in our assembly;
140. The commands of his mouth we have exalted above (those of) the gods his fathers.
141. Verily, he is the lord of all the gods of heaven and earth;
142. The king at whose instruction the gods above and below shall be afraid.\textsuperscript{138}
143. Narilugaldimmeranka\textsuperscript{137} is his name which we named; who takes care of all the gods;
144. Who in heaven and earth established our dwelling place in (the time of) trouble;
145. Who allotted stations to the Igigi and the Anunnaki.
146. At (the mention of) his name the gods shall quake (and) tremble in (their) dwelling(s).
147. Asarluhi\textsuperscript{137} is his name by which Anu, his (grand)father, called (him);
148. Verily, he is the light of the gods, the mighty prince;
149. Who, as a shēdu and šamassu\textsuperscript{139} of the gods and of the land,
150. In mighty combat saved our dwelling in (the time of) trouble.\textsuperscript{140}
151. Asarluhi they secondly called Namtilaku, the god who restores to life;

\textsuperscript{136} Var.: Maruku. \textsuperscript{138} Var.: Shudunshakusuhe.
\textsuperscript{137} Var.: Lugaldimmeranka, whose name let us proclaim in our assembly.
\textsuperscript{138} For ll. 142–66 cf. the fragment published by Ebeling in Mitteilungen der aalterorientalischen Gesellschaft, XII, Heft 4 (1939), 26 f.
\textsuperscript{139} These two expressions denote protecting genii.

---

ENûMA ELISH

TABLE VI—Continued

152. Who restored all the ruined gods, as though they were his own creation;
153. The lord who by his holy incantation restored the dead gods to life;
154. The destroyer of the insidious (?) enemies; come, let us extol [his] valor!
155. Asarluhi, whose name was thirdly called Namshub;\textsuperscript{141}
156. The bright god who brightens our way.
157. Anshar, Lānum, and Lašamu each proclaimed three of his names.
158. To the gods their sons they said:
159. "We have each proclaimed three of his names.
160. Like unto us, proclaim ye (also) his names."
161. The gods rejoiced and listened to their command.
162. They took counsel together in the Court of Assembly, (saying:)
163. "Of the valiant son, our avenger
164. (And) our provider, let us extol his name!"\textsuperscript{142}
165. So they sat down in their assembly to proclaim his destinies.
166. All of them mentioning his name(s) in the holy place(?).

CATCH LINE

Asaru, the bestower of arable land, who has established [the granaries].

TABLE VII\textsuperscript{143}

1. Asaru, the bestower of arable land, [who has established the granaries];
2. The creator of grain and legumes, who caus[es the green herb to spring up].

\textsuperscript{140} The poets are here apparently playing on the Sumerian term šuša, which is equated with the Babylonian words ēbu, idu, and namu, all of which mean "bright."
\textsuperscript{141} Var.: Let us exalt the name of the god!
\textsuperscript{142} Var.: to create (his) destinies.
\textsuperscript{143} With the entire tablet, particularly with ll. 43–130, is to be compared von Soden's article in Zeitschrift für Assyriologie, XLVII, 1–26.
TABLE VII—Continued

3. Asaralim, who carries weight in the house of counsel, [who excels in counsel];
4. (On whom) the gods did wait, (for) fear [had taken hold on them].
5. Asaralimnuna, the mighty one, the light of [the father of his begetter];
6. Who directs the decrees of Anu, Enlil, [and Ea];
7. He alone is their provider, who assigns [their dwelling places];
8. Whose spear provides abundance.
9. Tutu, the author of their restoration, [is he];
10. Let him purify their sanctuaries, that they [be at ease];
11. Let him create incantations for the gods that [they be at rest];
12. If they rise in anger, let them turn back [their breasts];
13. Verily, he is highly exalted in the assembly of the gods!
14. No one among the gods can e[qual] him.
15. Tutu is Ziukinna, the life of the host of [the gods];
16. Who established the bright heavens for the gods;
17. Who took control of their ways and assigned [their courses(?)];
18. May he not be forgotten among men, (but) [let them hold his deeds (in remembrance)].
19. Tutu they thirdly called Ziku, the maintainer of purifi-
20. The god of the good breath (of life), the lord who hears and answers (prayer);
21. The creator of riches and plenty, the establisher of abund-
22. Who has turned all our wants into plenty;
23. Whose good breath (of life) we smelled in sore distress;
24. Let them declare, exalt, (and) make glorious his praise.
25. Tutu may the people, in the fourth place, magnify as Agaku;

26. The lord of the holy incantation, who restores to life the dead;
27. Who had compassion on the vanquished gods;
28. Who removed the yoke imposed upon the gods, his en-
29. Who created mankind to set them free;\textsuperscript{146}
30. The merciful, in whose power it is to give life;
31. May his words endure and not be forgotten
32. In the mouths of mankind, whom his hands have created.
33. Tutu is, in the fifth (place), Tuku; may their mouth(s) at all times employ (?) his holy incantation;
34. Who with his holy incantation extirpated all the evil ones.
35. Shazu, who knows the hearts of the gods, who sees through\textsuperscript{146} the innermost parts;
36. From whom the evildoer cannot escape;
37. The establisher of the assembly of the gods, [who] gladdens their hearts;
38. Their wide [protec]tion, the subduer of the disobedient;
39. The administrator of justice, who pu[ts an end to(?)] crooked speech;
40. Who in his place discerns falsehood and truth.
41. Shazu may they secondly exalt as Ziši, who sil[ences] the insurgent;
42. Who drove the benumbing fear out of the bodies of the gods his fathers.
43. Shazu is, thirdly, Suḫrim, who destroys all (his) enemies with (his) weapon.
44. Who frustrates their plans (and) scatters (them) to the winds;
45. Who annihilates all the wicked ones, . . . .
46. Let the gods rejoice, (but) let them tremble(?)!
47. Shazu is, in the fourth (place), Suḫgurim, who grants petitions, who created (anew) the gods his fathers;
48. Who extirpates the enemies (and) destroys their offspring;

\textsuperscript{144} For the text of II. 21-45 cf. A. Falkenstein, \textit{Literarische Keilschrifttexte aus Uruk} (Berlin, 1931), No. 38, obv.

\textsuperscript{146} Var.: who saw through.
TABLE VII—Continued

49. Who shatters their works, not letting anything of them remain;
50. Let his name be declared (and) uttered in the land.
51. Shazu is, in the fifth (place), Zahrîm; let them extol (?) (him) as the lord (?) of the living (?);
52. Who destroys all the enemies, who requites (both) good and evil;
53. Who brought all the fugitive gods back to their sanctuaries;
54. May this his name endure!
55. In the sixth (place), may they, in addition, worship Shazu everywhere as Zahgura;
56. Who destroyed all the enemies as if in a battle.
57. Enbilulu, the lord who provides them with plenty, is he;
58. The mighty one, who called them by their names, who established offerings of baked goods;
59. Who regulates pasture (and) drinking places (and) has established (them) for the land;
60. Who has opened the fountains (and) has apportioned water in abundance (?).
61. Let them secondly glorify Enbilulu as Epadun, the lord who waters the field (?);
62. The ruler of heaven (and) earth, the establisher of furrows, who regulates the arable land and the pasture land (?);
63. The canal and (its) embankment, who designed the furrow.
64. Let them thirdly praise Enbilulu as Gugal, the administrator of the plantations of the gods;
65. The lord of plenty, abundance, (and) heavy crops;
66. The provider of wealth, who enriches all (?) the dwelling places;
67. The giver of emmer, who causes barley to be.
68. Enbilulu is Hegal, who stores up plenty for man's consumption;
69. Who causes abundance to rain down upon the wide earth (and) makes the green herb grow luxuriantly.

70. Sîrsîr,147 who heaped up a mountain over (?) Ti'amat;
71. Who with his weapon dragged off (?) the body of Ti'amat;
72. The guardian of the land, their faithful shepherd;
73. . . . . . . . . . . . . . . . . . . . . .
74. Who crosses the wide sea in its anger,
75. As a bridge passes over the place of conflict.
76. Sîrsîr they secondly called Malakh, and so forth;
77. The sea is his craft upon which he rides.
78. Gil, who heaps up heaps of grain, fat hills;
79. The creator of barley and emmer, who provides seed for the land.
80. Gilma, the establisher of the durmah of the gods, the creator of enduring things;
81. The bond that holds the family (?) together, the provider of good things.
82. Agilma, the sublime, who tears off the crown, [. . . . .];
83. The creator of the clouds above the waters, the establisher of [the heavens].
84. Zulum, who assigns the field [ds. . . . ];
85. The giver of portions and offerings, who superevises . . . .]
86. Zulum is secondly Mummu, the creator of heaven (and) earth, who directs the clouds;
87. The god who purifies heaven and earth;
88. To whom no one among the gods is equal in power.
89. Gishnumunab, the creator of all men, the maker of the four regions of the earth;
90. The destroyer of the gods of Ti'amat, who created mankind with their bodies (?).148
91. Luqlaladubur, the king who shattered the works of Ti'amat, who took away her weapons;
92. Whose foundation is firmly established before and behind.
93. Pagalguenna, the first of all the lands, the one whose strength is mighty;

147 The reading of this name is Landsberger's.
148 According to Tablet VI: 29 ff., mankind was created with the body of Kingu alone.
94. Who is highly exalted among the gods his brothers, the lord of all of them.
95. Lugalturman, the king, the bond of the gods, the lord of the durman;
96. Who is highly exalted in the abode of kingship, who is very prominent among the gods.
97. Aranunna, the counselor of Ea, the creator of the gods his fathers;
98. Whom no god whatever can equal in his princely way.
99. Dumuduku, whose holy dwelling is renovated in Duku;
100. Dumuduku, without whom Lugaldukuga\textsuperscript{149} does not make a decision.
101. Lugallanna, the king whose might is exalted among the gods;
102. The lord, the power of Anu, who surpasses the name(?) of Anshar.
103. Lugalugga, who dragged off all of them into the midst of the sea;
104. Who possesses all wisdom, who has a broad understanding.
105. Irkingu, who dragged off Kingu into the . . . of the battle;
106. Who controls the instructions for all, the establisher of rulership.
107. Kinma, the leader of all the gods, the giver of counsel;
108. At whose name the gods tremble for fear, as at the storm.
109. Esiisukur—may he sit on a high seat in the house of prayer;
110. May the gods bring their gifts before him.
111. (From him) they receive their assignments;
112. Without him no one can create ingenious things;
113. The four (groups of) mankind are his creation;\textsuperscript{150}
114. Besides him no god whatever knows the appointed time(?) of their days.
115. Girru, the establisher of the . . . of the weapon;
116. Who in (his) conflict with Trūmat creates ingenious things;
117. The one with a wide understanding, an intelligent mind, \textsuperscript{149} Enlil, the chief god of the city of Nippur. \textsuperscript{150} I.e., the people of the four regions of the earth: Akkad, Elam, Subartu, and Amurru.

118. (And) an unsearchable heart, which the gods in their totality cannot fathom.
119. Addu shall be his name; may he cover the whole sky;
120. May his beautiful thunder be mighty(?) upon the earth;
121. May (his) thunder rend(?) the clouds and give sustenance to the people below.
122. Asharu, who, as his name (indicates), took care of the gods (determining) the destinies;
123. With the nocturnal rest(?) of all the gods he is intrusted.
124. Nibiru shall be in control of the passages in heaven and on earth,
125. For everyone above and below who cannot find the passage enquires of him.
126. Nibiru is his star which they caused to shine in the sky;
127. He has taken position at the solstitial point(?), may they look upon him,
128. Saying: "He who crosses the middle of the sea without resting,
129. His name shall be Nibiru, who occupies the middle thereof;
130. May he maintain the course of the stars of heaven;
131. May he shepherd all the gods like sheep;
132. May he subdue Trūmat, may he distress her life, and may it be short!
133. Until future (generations of) men, when the (present) days have grown old,
134. May she retreat without hindrance, may she withdraw forever!"
135. Since he created the (heavenly) places (and) fashioned the firm earth,
136. Father Enil called his name Lord of the Lands.
137. All the names which the Igigi proclaimed,
138. Ea heard and his spirit rejoiced,
139. Saying: "He whose names his fathers have magnified,
140. He is even as I; his name shall (therefore) be Ea!
141. The totality of all my rites shall he control;
142. All my ordinances shall he direct."
143. With the name Fifty the great gods
144. Called (him) whose names are fifty (and thus) made his way pre-eminent.\textsuperscript{141}

\textbf{EPILOGUE}

145. Let them be held in remembrance and let the first one\textsuperscript{142} teach (them);
146. Let the wise (and) the knowing consider (them) together;
147. Let the father repeat (them) and teach (them) to his sons;
148. Let the ears (even) of shepherd and herdsman be opened (to them).\textsuperscript{143}
149. Let (man) rejoice in Marduk, the Enlil of the gods,
150. That his land be fruitful (and) it be well with him.
151. Reliable is his word, unalterable his command;
152. The utterance of his mouth no god whatever can change.
153. He looks on and does not turn his neck;
154. When he is wroth, no god can withstand his indignation.
155. Unsearchable is his heart, (all-)embracing his mind;
156. The sinner and the transgressor are an abomination before him.
157. The instructions which an ancient(?) one spoke before him(?).

\textit{(Rest too fragmentary for translation)}

\textsuperscript{141} For the translation of the last two lines cf. Jensen in \textit{Orientalistische Literaturzeitung}, Vol. XXVIII, col. 25. "Lord of the Lands" was originally Enlil's own title. Its transfer to Marduk involved the transfer of Enlil's power and functions to the god of Babylon. This was the last of the fifty names which the gods in their assembly had decided to proclaim (Tablet VI: 121). But as Ea listened to the proclamation, in which he had apparently not taken an active part, he resolved to confer his own name on Marduk, in addition to those already proclaimed by the Igigi. Since the step which Ea here took was entirely his own, the number of names proclaimed by the assembly of the gods was still fifty, which permitted the gods to call Marduk Hanshi ("Fifty"), in token that the names which they had declared publicly were fifty. Since Fifty was one of Enlil's own names and since, moreover, it epitomizes and symbolizes Marduk's fifty titles, it gave the latter pre-eminence over all the other divinities of the pantheon. With the fifty names of Marduk may be compared the ninety-nine titles of Allah.

\textsuperscript{142} Whether in time or in rank is uncertain.

\textsuperscript{143} I.e., may even the shepherd and the herdsman receive knowledge of the names of Marduk for their enlightenment.